(s. 109–128)

Abstract

In the course of less than a century of its existence, Chambers of Commerce and Trade represented significant institutions of the economic life of the Habsburg Monarchy and the Czechoslovak Republic. This was also the case of the Opava Chamber. Hence, the aim of the study presented is to try to approach major milestones in its development, from the process of establishment in 1850 until its abolition at the end of 1948, especially in the area of the elected members of the Chamber, the right to vote and the changes in its chamber district.

Ivana MALOUŠKOVÁ: Hřbitov v roli kroniky obce – příklad pohřebišť v Opavě-Kateřinkách / A Cemetery as a Village Chronicle – an Example of Burial Grounds in Opava-Kateřinky

(s. 165–182)

Abstract

The article deals with the history of burial grounds in the district of Opava-Kateřinky in the period from the second half of the 19th century and also pays attention to the last resting places of local personalities. The original cemetery in this municipality had been located around the church of St. Catherine of Alexandria since the Middle Ages, from where it was, after the cholera epidemic in 1866, gradually moved to the Chapel of the Holy Cross on the outskirts of this municipality. In 1896, a municipal cemetery, later called the town cemetery, was expanded and built. Kateřinky was mainly a peasant village, but the composition of origin and occupation of the deceased is quite manifold. At the church of St. Catherine, for example, tombstones of the possessors of the local courts, such as Czedik from Badenfeld, Renard or Rudzinski, have been preserved. In the church cemetery as well as the municipal one, there were then buried, for example, Matěj Valík, a chronicler and municipal secretary, František Eliáš, the Chief Regional Judicial Councillor, whose bond with the municipality was shielded by his wife Marie, Antonín Gruda a priest and politician, or Vincenc Janáček, the uncle of the composer Leoš Janáček, who chose Kateřinky as the place for spending the rest of his life. Information about the cemetery and the deceased is brought mainly by funds deposited in the Regional Archives in Opava and in the State District Archives in Opava. Additional information is also provided by the records and indices of funerals stored in the archive of Technical Services of the City of Opava - Cemetery Administration.
